Tenacity

If I had to select one word to describe the business climate of 2021 it would be “tenacity”.

This was a pivotal year for the Central Valley small business community – a year of recovery, a year of growth, and a year of strategizing for the future. This was a year of repositioning for success.

Small business owners stood in the face of adversity and had hard conversations with themselves; conversations where “what ifs” became actionable pivots and where earnest questions of survival hung over every decision.

Many businesses did not make it.

But 2021 was also a year where small business owners weathering the storm were able to see the sun begin to peak through the clouds of COVID-19 uncertainty, shelter in place, “essential businesses” and employee fatigue. It was the year of the “Great Resignation,” a catalyst for potential entrepreneurs to take the leap into self-employment. It was a year where hundreds of people across the valley took their futures and financial security into their own hands and pursued their dream to finally hang up a sign of their own.

In 2021 we at Access Plus Capital recognized the need for training, resources, and one-on-one assistance for this new group of business owners and launched a dedicated Business Development Team to do just that. We expanded our capacity to fund, our capacity to serve, and our capacity to support, adding not just staff, but also moving into a larger facility -- repositioning ourselves to better accommodate the needs of our local business communities.

We recognized the disparities in Kern County, and we intentionally turned our focus toward supporting the business community there. We saw record growth in the assistance offered to south valley businesses in 2021. We worked closely with the City of Bakersfield, strengthened our partnerships with Kern County business chambers and began a recruitment campaign to bring the best business development resources to the residents of these urban and rural communities.

Looking ever forward, 2021 has set us on a trajectory of growth and success, and we will use this momentum to invest in our community for many years to come.
